

The need for financial literacy education is not new. However, with more than 22 million jobs vanishing because of the pandemic, society is learning the importance of teaching financial literacy now more than ever. During this economic crisis, it is critical that young people and their families have the tools necessary to manage limited resources. Time out of the classroom means less time for financial literacy to squeeze itself in between history, geography, and social studies.

Cents Ability is now proudly offering virtual financial literacy workshops in New York City and Chicago. We are fervently committed to our mission because make no mistake about it -- the work we do and whom we do it for, is worth it.

The need for financial literacy education is not new. However, with more than 22 million jobs vanishing because of the pandemic, society is learning the importance of teaching financial literacy now more than ever. During this economic crisis, it is critical that young people and their families have the tools necessary to manage limited resources. Time out of the classroom means less time for financial literacy to squeeze itself in between history, geography, and social studies.

Cents Ability is now proudly offering virtual financial literacy workshops in New York City and Chicago. We are fervently committed to our mission because make no mistake about it -- the work we do and whom we do it for, is worth it.